In press speculation that fol-lowed the announcement, it was suggested that Mr. Tiedge's sudden switch had alarmed the British intelligence services because Mr. Tiedge might have tipped off Mos-cow about Mr. Gordievsky, Britain therefore, might have decided to call Mr. Gordievsky in.

But authoritative officials said, in addition to pointing out that the timing was wrong, that it was inconceivable that the West Germans, who have a poor security record, would have been told about Britain's spy high up in the KGB. The first disclosure that Mr.

U.S. Destroys A Satellite in Weapon Test

Vashington Past Service

WASHINGTON - The United States conducted the first flight test of its anti-satellite weapon against a target in space Friday, and the Pentagon said that the experiment Pentagon officials said that the radio signals "stopped on both the satellite and the missile," indicating that both had been destroyed. The test shot involved an F-15 fighter firing a test rocket with a nonexplosive warhead at an obsolete, six-year-old U.S. Air Force satellite traveling more than 200 miles (324 kilometers) above Vandenberg Air Force Base in California in a north-to-south polar orbit.

An infrared homing device carried by the rocket maneuvered into the path of the satellite and the weapon destroyed it on impact. Ground-based radars at Vandenberg and the North American Air Defense Command in Wyoming were used to track the war-head. Plans for the test, like the antisatellite system itself, had provoked controversy in the United States and threats from the Soviet The test took place one day after a U.S. District Court judge rejected a request by four congressman to enjoin it. In her ruling, issued in Washington, the judge said that the issue was political and "should not be determined in this forum."

Critics contend that the proposed system will trigger a new type of arms race in space. Moscow has said that if the United States holds "tests using anti-satellite weapons" against largets in space, it will "consider itself free of its unilateral commitment not to place anti-satellite systems in space."

Late Thursday, after the judge's opinion had been released, a letter signed by 100 members of Congress was sent to the White House asking President Ronald Reagan to after his November summit meeting in Geneva with the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Mr. Reagan, in a certification to Congress on Aug. 20, said that the administration "had been unable, to date, to identify a specific" antisatellite proposal that was verifi-able, but that it was "seriously exploring with the U.S.S.R. arms control arrangements intended to prevent an arms race in space."

The anti-satellite weapon launched from the F-15 is not the first such system that the United States has developed. In the 1960s, the United States tested and deployed a nuclear anti-satellite weapon that was launched atop a Thor intermediate-range missile. The system was based on Johnston Island in the Pacific Ocean.

U.S. Fears Soviet Looks Too Flexible

By Remard Gwertzman

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - U.S. arms negotiators in Geneva have expressed concern about what they perceive to be a Soviet public relations advantage gained in recent months. Reagan administration officials said.

According to the officials, the issue was raised by Max M. Kampelman, the chief U.S. negotiator, in a meeting on Thursday with Secretary of State George P. Shultz to discuss the next round of the Geneva talks, resuming next week.

Mr. Kampelman was said to be frustrated at the Russians' ability to create the impression that by offering new ideas that were then rejected by the United States, they were more flexible than the Ameri-

At Geneva, the Russians have insisted that there could be "radical reductions" in nuclear arsenals if the United States were to halt work on its space-based defense program. But the Soviet Union has not defined the scope of the reductions, U.S. officials said.

According to a senior official, Mr. Kampelman told Viktor P. Karpov, the chief Soviet negotiator, in a private meeting that the Soviet Union was missing an opportunity in not putting forth a figure to demonstrate its willingness for "radical" reductions.

The Russians have been waiting for the Americans to give up the space-weapons program before making concrete offers. But outside the negotiations, the Soviet side has suggested flexibility beyond what was introduced in the talks, officials said.

This has irritated Mr. Shultz, who told Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze of the Soviet Union in Helsinki on July 31 that Moscow should bring up any new ideas at the negotiations and not in public forums, a senior official

WASHINGTON — Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has warned the administration that its plan to draft trade legislation with Republican congressional leaders would not stop his panel from writing its own protectionist bills.

At a news conference Thursday, the Illinois Democrat said the panel would produce bills to curb textile imports and to impose a tariff surcharge on all imports from four countries. Mr. Rostenkowski said President Ronald Reagan's "strategy of slowing the push for tougher trade policy isn't working."

He said the administration would face "a crippling fight with Congress" if the new Reagan program fails to bring "retribution against countries who keep out as unfaithed. countries who keep out, or unfairly drive up the price, of U.S. products." Mr. Rostenkowski said his committee would

The chairman's timetable appears to assure that the textile bill, which commands support from about two-thirds of the House and half of the Senate, will be the first of about 300 pending protectionist bills to reach the president's desk. Mr. Rostenkowski said a bill which would place 25 percent surcharges on imports from mittee's trade subcommittee, at the su Japan, Taiwan, Korea and Brazil would be taken up next month as the next order of business after the tax bill. ### Sinowatz Presses Craxi on Alto Adige

ROME (Reuters) - Chancellor Fred Sinowatz of Austria has asked Prime Minister Bettino Craxi of Italy to intervene in problems involving the region of South Tirol, saying these overshadowed Austrian-Italian relations. After World War I, the territory was ceded to Italy, which calls it Alto Adige, but it has a German-speaking population that identifies more closely with Austria. Mr. Sinowatz, on a visit to Rome, said Thursday that many provisions of a 1969 autonomy agreement had been implemented but he asked Mr. Craxi "personally to intervene in order to overcome the last obstacles." Political commentators said these included raising German to the same rank as Italian in courts, police stations and on the state-owned radio.

LONDON (Renters) - British investigators said Friday that a faulty escape chute temporarily jammed an emergency door aboard the Boeing 737 jetliner that burst into flames on takeoff in Manchester last month, killing 55 persons.

The Ministry of Transport said in an interim report that the captain had ordered the aircraft evacuated via right-hand exits after an engine exploded, rupturing the fuel tank on the left wing.

The report said that one crew member rushed to open the right front door. "However," it said, "a cover over the inflatable slide jammed

WASHINGTON — Two Soviet warships are expected to pay a port call to Mexico next month for the first time, and the U.S. State Department has expressed concern about the visit in a message to the Mexican government.

The planned visit is significant, one official said Thursday, because until now Soviet naval deployments to the Caribbean have included port calls only in Cuba. "Obviously, we're concerned about the Soviet ability to move their ships in and out of the Caribbean," a State Department official said. "Mexico is an independent country and they can do what they want, but we have made our concerns known."

A Kashin guided-missile de-stroyer and a Krivak guided-missile frigate are expected to visit the eastern Mexican port of Veracruz on Oct. 4, officials said. The vessels now are in the North Atlantic

U.S. Officials Identify Tongue Sore As Early Symptom in AIDS Victims

ATLANTA — U.S. health officials say they have identified an early symptom of AIDS — a tongue sore first noticed among victims in San Francisco four years ago at the start of the AIDS epidemic. The national Centers for Disease Control urged health-care providers to watch for the sore as a diagnostic tool for early recognition and treatment of acquired immune deliciency syndrome.

The centers said the tongue sore or lesson, known as hairy leukopla-kia, appears as raised white areas of thickening on the tongue and has "hairy" appearance.

The sore was seen for the first time in San Francisco AIDS victims in 1981, the centers said. Since then it has been reported in AIDS patients examined in Paris, Copenhagen, London, Los Angeles, Saltimore and Ann Arbor, Michigan.

The centers said that from October 1981 to June of this year, 13 of 123 patients with hairy leukoplakia seen in San Francisco "were additionally diagnosed as having AIDS." Twenty others later developed the disease and 78 of the 123 tested positive for antibodies to the

Civilian Killings by Both Sides Rise in El Salvador

Los Angeles Times Service
WASHINGTON — The human rights group Americas Watch has reported a sharp increase in human rights violations by both sides in the Salvadoran civil war in the first half of 1985.

1982, the group said Thursday that paramilitary death squad killings, which numbered only 39 in the last half of 1984, rose to 81 for the first six months of 1985. For the same period, killings of civilians by guerrillas rose from 29 to 53, it found.

The report characterized the atsoldiers in 1980.

Cracks in Apartheid's Walls

For more than four and a half years President Reagan practiced "constructive engage-ment" with South Africa, and reform there proceeded at a pace that those who wish to end apartheid found completely unacceptable. Two days after he initiated mild sanctions, the Pretoria government pledged to restore South African citizenship to the millions of blacks from whom it had stolen that birthright, and the next day a weather-vane advisory commis-sion called for abolition of the pass laws.

It cannot all be due, of course, to Mr. Reagan's new receptivity to sanctions. The South Africans, insisting that they did not merely bend to pressure, say the changes were in the works for a long time. Yet less than a month ago President Pieter W. Botha appar-ently cranked up to make such changes, and did not. Soon new blows were delivered to the South African economy by private banks worried about their money, and then the Congress pressed Mr. Reagan into reversing course on sanctions. Did Pretoria conclude it had best make a gesture to him in order to earn passage back toward his patronage? The reforms now being cited hardly prove a South African change of heart. Restoration of citizenship undermines the odious intent of apartheid to spin off blacks to tribal "homelands," making them foreigners in their own country. The restoration heightens the pres-sure on Pretoria to permit blacks an acceptable political role in South Africa. The pass laws, a cornerstone of apartheid, control where blacks savage instrument of white repression.

The ruling whites offer up these measures as major alterations in apartheid. But they come so late and begrudgingly that many blacks are likely to find them thin gruel. They are what Bishop Desmond Tutu, who is a moderate among South African blacks, calls piecemeal reform of a sort that "no longer excites us." He adds: "I don't want apartheid reformed. I want it dismantled." By dismantling, he means ending the system that denies blacks full politi-cal rights. In all the twisting and turning of the Botha government, no signs are yet visible that it understands the rightness, urgency and inevitability of that goal

Some whites in South Africa, to be sure, may be thinking of taking this step. Five prominent businessmen, including an Afrikaner, were in Zambia on Friday for a first acknowledged meeting with the outlawed African National Congress. The five were at once defying the government's stated wishes and conducting a political reconnaissance. This is the sort of initiative the government is going to have to take. As long as it not only disenfranchises blacks but also locks up their natural leaders - the Reverend Allan Boesak is the latest of note to be jailed - it ensures that blacks will turn to other means of struggle, and it renders suspect and marginal its other initiatives. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Seven Still Are Missing

Israel has now freed the last Lebanese and Palestinians whose release was demanded in June by hijackers of a TWA airliner. The hijackers freed the last 39 American passengers on a tacit understanding that Israel would hold to its previous promise to liberate 766 captives taken from Lebanon. If it was a deal, it has been honored.

Where does that leave seven other Americans held imprisoned somewhere in Lebanon? Pretty much where they were before the notorious hijacking: out of the camera's sight, out of the public's mind. To remind, here are their names, and the lengths of their captivity:

Thomas Sutherland, agriculture dean at the American University in Beirut, held since June; David Jacobsen, director of the American University hospital, since May; Terry Anderson of The Associated Press, since March: Lawrence Jenco of Catholic Relief, since January; Peter Kilburn, an American University librarian, since December; Benjamin Weir, a Presbyterian minister, since May 1984; William Buckley, political officer of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, since March 1984. All are believed to be prisoners of kidnappers who are said to demand the release of 17 comrades convicted of terrorist crimes in Kuwait. The State Department insists it is urgently working for the Americans' release. Their amilies insist not enough is being done. In Damascus, a member of Congress was recently told that nothing could be done until Israel released the last Lebanese.

In this cruel game, all that may be true, or false. What is certain is that leaders behave differently when bostages are prime-time news. If the seven Americans are half-forgotten, the fault lies in ourselves.

A Soviet Spy Defects

The defection of Oleg A. Gordievsky has to be treated with circumspection. The likelihood is that of a long-running spy coming in from the cold, rather than that of a loyal Kremlin servant suddenly seeing the light. Because the Russians know he is gone, and thus that we know what he knows, there is no option for letting matters lie. The 25 [Russians he named as spies) have to go.

It would be a miserable pity if the exit of the 25 is taken as signal for Anglo-Soviet freeze.

Mr. Gordievsky, sure enough, will be busy singing many fascinating songs. But the overriding need, at a time of tension and opportunity, is the need for statesmen and politicians across the divide to talk to each other. And letting spying get in the way of that is letting gether barren end.

Peres at the Halfway Point

A year has passed since Israel began, unenthusiastically, its experiment in political co-habitation. On Sept. 13, 1984, Shimon Peres assumed a 25-month leadership of a government of national unity after a parliamentary majority could not be formed. In October 1986, Likud's Yitzhak Shamir will take over.

No one harbored much hope for this "gov-ernment by relay." It has, however, survived without too much embarrassment. Now halfway through his term, Mr. Peres's record is mixed but, on the whole, honorable. A man of conciliation and compromise, the prime minister has helped relax Israeli political life. There is a little less talk of the Holocaust and the Bible and much more discussion of the health of the currency and of the technological challenges Israel faces.

Protection From Ourselves

An unsettling aspect of the protectionist debate emerges from follow-up interviews of respondents to a New York Times-CBS News poll. The poll revealed that most Americans think the Japanese work harder and make better products, and that U.S. complaints about unfair trade practices are a form of scapegoating. Consider this typical response: "Here, guys want to retire and buy a motor home, travel around the country. That's just thinking of the individual, selfishly. The Japa-nese worker is thinking. I am putting out a quality product I am proud of.

At a time many in Congress insist they sense a wave of protectionist sentiment, this poll's findings suggest the opposite. Think of the gall of calling ourselves overpaid loafers in one breath and in the next demanding that the government protect us from the consequences.

Birmingham: An Indian View

Those killed and most of those injured [in the Birmingham riots] are said to be Indian settlers, while the property destroyed belonged both to Indian and Pakistani immigrants. The government reportedly views the riots as an isolated example of lawlessness. What happened is neither all that isolated nor a matter of spontaneous lawlessness. If immigrants from the West Indies attacked Asians in Birmingham, it was not for reasons of color. Social and economic factors are at the root of the problem: an unemployment rate far above the national level, feelings of racial discrimination, drugs and urban decay.

OPEC: Down, Hardly Out

The OPEC share of world oil liftings has fallen to around 30 percent. But the organization's exports still account for more than 70 percent of worldwide oil trading. And the proven oil reserves of the Soviet Union and the United States, like those of the British sector of the North Sea, will at present consumption rates be exhausted in 15 years, whereas many OPEC countries can expect continued liftings for something like 70 years. Sooner or later, the industrialized nations will have to reckon with a renewed OPEC stranglehold unless they find adequate substitutes.

A Narrow View on the Clever Mr. Gorbachev

WASHINGTON -- The period V leading up to a summit meeting is a time for expansiveness, and Mikhail Gorbachev has been adroitly feeding the feeling. His interview in Time magazine and the hints he dropped to a visiting delegation of U.S. senators have raised pation of U.S. schators have raised hopes that this really is a man we can do husiness with — to quote Margaret Thatcher and, most recently, Claiborne Pell, one of the senatorial pilgrims to Moscow. Can we indeed? A close reading of Mr. Gorbachev's fall offensive suggests another view; the narrow view.

The expansive view derives largely from the vaunted Gorbachev style. Not so much his tailoring or his wife, but his language. He speaks Westernese. It is his rhetori-cal style that has him "running rings around Reagan in pre-summit pro-paganda," as Tom Wicker put it. Westspeak is hard to miss. It is characterized by:

 The language of shared hopes:
 We also believe it immoral to waste hundreds of billions on developing means of annihilation, while hundreds of millions of people go hungry.... Spoken like Willy Brandt. The famine victims of Ethi-opia, where Mr. Gorbachev sinks millions for weaponry and little for food, will be pleased with the news.

2) An air of mutual tolerance: "We have never accused the U.S. of being an 'evil empire.' " Perhaps, but as the analyst Dimitri Simes points out, in the past 12 months the Russians have accused the United States of preparing to invade Leba-non over the TWA hijacking, and of a role in both the assassination of Indira Gandhi and the destruction of the Air India plane. 3) Enough "moral equivalence" to fuel a season of neoconservative conferences: "We have something to say about . . . violations of huma rights in America itself.... Is it worthwhile for the sake of that to set up a summit meeting?" And,

"Neither the president nor I will be able to ignore the mood in our respective countries or that of our style is not of itself proof of bad faith. What is most troubling is Mr. mit politics of the narrowest kind. Single-issue politics. For Mr. Gor-bachev this is the "star wars" summit meeting. Follow his discussions and all roads lead to "star wars." And yet the remarkable thing about his two hours with the Time editors and his three with the senators is the fact that Mr. Gorbachev said absolutely nothing new on the subject. Unless, that is, you count the concession that he will permit fundamental research on "star wars." As Senator Sam Nunn explained the proposal:

We will allow you to think Thank you, General Secretary. As a concession, this amounts to permitting the sun to rise in the East on a daily basis. In reality Mr. Gor-bachev's concession is a reiteration of the most self-serving Soviet position at the Geneva arms talks. He demands that nonfundamental re-search, such as predevelopment acallies." More good news, this time for voters in Moscow and Prague.
On the whole, he is stylish. And tivity involving models, be banned.

Of course he does. This is precisely the kind of activity that open societies cannot hide and that closed societies specialize in hiding. Any such ban would be unilateral.

The other headline-making offer was that if the United States would give up "star wars." the Russians would make radical proposals, presumably for reducing offensive weapons, on "the very next day." This, "The Day After," Soviet-style, is an elegantly crafted way of repeating the Soviet stonewall position at Geneva: no negotiations on anything until the U.S. side first gives up its trump card.

In nonexpansive times, this is known as a precondition, and generally considered unhelpful, as the diplomats say, to the success of negotiation. Today it is considered a sign of flexibility, cause for hope. The other headline-making offer sign of flexibility, cause for hope.

Is there a reason for hope? If Mr.

Gorbachev really is hinting at a deal — restraints on strategic defenses in exchange for restraints on offensive missiles — then he can do two things. First, make clear the deal is a duet for simultaneous, not sequen-tial, play. No "day after." More important, do it at Geneva. Seriousness is shown there, not in the press or in huddles with touring senators. There is one more thing Mr. Gorbachev might consider, one of those "propaganda gestures" for which he likes to feign disdain — a gesture that would make no dent in his strategic posture, yet genuinely im-press those cynics not yet swept up-by his style or his substance. He could set free Andrei Sakharov, Anatoli Shcharansky and the thou-sands of Soviet Jews for whom the system is a prison and who ask only to be allowed to leave.

if good pre-summit atmospherics is what Mr. Gorbachev wants, that is the way to achieve it. It is unlikely he will try. While he holds to his negotiating preconditions, and his prisoners, it will be hard to think of Gorbachev the Statesman as anything but a clever politician of the highest style and of

A Proper Use for 'Star Wars': Trade It for Peace

WASHINGTON — U.S. strategy for the Reagan-Gorbachev summit meeting in Geneva hinges on a crucial decision facing the American president about space weapons.

Mr. Reagan's advisers are divided on his "star wars" scheme, as his Strategic Defense Initiative is called. One view favors putting the SDI on the table as a "bargaining chip" in the Geneva nego-tiations, which resume next week. America would accept limits on missile defenses in exchange for cuts in strategic offensive weapons.

That view dominates within the State Department, the National Security Council and the military. The belief is that an arms control agreement that benefits U.S. security should be sought. But without limits on missile defenses, it would be impossible for the Russians to reduce offensive weapons when they may need a larger force to counter future U.S. defenses.

Another group, including Pentagon civilians, some military men and the Republican right, sees the SDI as a useful monkey wrench in the Gene-va machinery. They oppose limits on the U.S. buildup. By refusing to accept limits on the SDI, they fear, will halt the U.S. buildup while Moscow continues its buildup.

A compromise united the bargaining-chip and monkey-wrench factions in January. Defense American negotiators instead will ask Moscow Secretary Caspar Weinberger agreed to enlarge for formal proposals with precise numbers. the agenda to include space weapons, on two conditions: holding firm for heavily disproportionate Soviet reductions in land missiles, and avoiding any "negotiations" now to limit space defenses. The Americans were authorized to "discuss" the SDI but only to lecture the Russians on the advantages of missile defense over the doctrine of deterrence,

By Robert Kleiman

The compromise has lasted because both groups wanted the SDI to gain credibility, as it has, from increased congressional appropria-tions. And the Soviet posture was as unnegotia-ble as the American. Moscow demanded an unverifiable ban on all space defense research. That would halt most U.S. but few Soviet programs.

But Moscow now hints that it might be willing to distinguish between some research permitted by the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty and the development, testing and deployment that is banned by the treaty. Mikhail Gorbachev also is promising "radical" reductions — up to 40 percent. Moscow hints - in offensive arms if missile defenses are limited. Members of the ba interested in this. But until they get more detailed proposals favorable to American interests, they are hesitant to open a bloody interagency battle.

But Kremlin moderates have similar internal usually hinged on American proposals. So restiveness over the lack of progress in Geneva is growing in Congress and among the North Atlantic Treaty Organization governments.

The Geneva stalemate is preventing progress toward reductions that the Europeans seek in Soviet medium-range missiles aimed at them. It frustrates European efforts for East-West accord that even leaders as conservative as Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain consider politically necessary. And it aids anti-NATO groups in European opposition parties.

Most NATO governments, want the United States to start negotiating soon to trade off the SDI for Soviet offensive missile cuts. They fear that the program's momentum could get both superpowers committed to defenses that are destabilizing, expensive, yet ineffective. Some in Washington who feel that way are trying their hand at drafting a Reagan-Gorbachev agreement instructing their negotiators to negotiate.

It is worth trying. The Kremlin faces critical decisions on a five-year investment split between military and civilian needs. President Reagan might influence that decision by convincing Mr. Gorbachev that serious talks to trade parts of SDI for offensive missile cuts are possible.

The writer is working on a book on the Western alliance as a visiting research fellow at London's Royal Institute of International Affairs. He conproblems. That is why past aegotiations have tributed this comment to The New York Times.

Veto: When the President's Vote Is All That Counts

AMHERST, Massachusetts — Americans have always been of two minds about democracy. On the one hand, "Vox Populi, Vox Dei" the voice of the people is the voice of God. On the other hand, Alexis de Tocqueville was right when he warned - as John Adams had before him — against the "tyranny of the majority." Even Thomas Jefferson could not quite make up his mind, witness his first inaugural address: "The will of the majority is in all cases to prevail" but "that will ... must be reasonable."

Who then is to decide reasonableness — the majority, speaking through legislatures, or the executive, exercising the power to veto?

The response generally seems to have depended on men and issues. If it is the king or royal governors, or even unsympathetic presidents and governors of their own choosing, Americans seem to fear tyranny. When during the Colonial era, royal governors vetoed whatever colonial legislation they disapproved — as they had a right to do except in Con-necticut and Rhode Island — legislators outwitted them by adding special provisions close to a governor's heart in their own appropriations.

Benjamin Franklin explained the technique: "In Pennsylvania it became the regular practice to have orders on the Treasury in his [the governor's] favor presented along with the bills to be signed, so that he might actually receive the former before he should sign the latter."

The first example of royal tyranny offered by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence was that George III "has refused his assent to laws the most wholesome and necessary for the public good." And when the states framed their own constitutions only three granted their elected governors even a limited veto. A decade's experience with the follies of unruly state legislatures, however, had a sobering effect. When the Founding Fathers came to frame a national government, they readily granted the president power to veto congressional bills subject to reversal by two-thirds of both houses. To be sure, they might not have gone that far had it not been for the prospect of General George Washington presiding with austere dignity over their deliberations: Who would dare exBy Henry Steele Commager press misgivings about a president in the presence of that Olympian figure? Early presidents exercised their veto power sparingly: Washington twice, Adams and Jefferson not at all. James Madison five times and James Monroe once; total vetoes from 1789 to 1865, only 36.

Within a few years that changed. In the 1860s and 1870s, the veto became a weapon in the party struggle over Reconstruction: When the Democrats finally returned to power in the Congress, they sought to undo Reconstruction legislation by withholding money necessary to enforce it; Republican presidents responded with vetoes, and from time to time government came to a standstill. With the inevitable growth of presidential power during a half century of imperialism and war, the veto came again to the fore as a major weapon in political battles, especially under Franklin Roosevelt. Theodore Roosevelt used it 82 times, Woodrow Wilson 44, and FDR the staggering total of 635, including no less than use of "riders," usually of special or local interest, added as free-loaders to the general appropriations bill. These are designed to open the flood-gates of federal money to the spon-sor's district. Naturally, presidents are reluctant to veto an appropria-tions bill on which the day-to-day operation of the government depends; they are reluctant, too, to af-front congressmen, especially of their own party, who rely on such govern-ment largesse to help win elections. But what profits the congressman and his district is not necessarily profitable to all the American people. It is this sorry situation that has pably of little value to the country. What are some of the pros and cons of legalizing the item veto?

If the choice is between one man's views and those of the majority, who should prevail?

First the pros: The veto would go far to end the devious practice of exploiting resources designed for the good of the whole for local and often personal profit.
Second, it would save money though not much — and it might raise standards of political morality. Third, it might save time and resources for a Congress already bur-dened by a budget of fantastic pro-portions, discouraging items designed to benefit a party or a par-ticular congressman and, at the same time, relieve many congressmen of improper local pressures. Arguments against:

First, the item veto is not really necessary: The same end could be hieved by following state practice of writing into the appropriations bills a provision permitting executive vetoes for extraneous items. Second, it would enhance the executive power - aiready spreading in all directions — by permitting the president to usurp an authority spe-ing the veto on their particular items.

Fourth, it would distract both Congress and president from their major responsibility by encouraging intensive investigation as to the valid-also reward supporters by withhold-ity of innumerable petty projects.

And fifth, since the veto is provided in the Constitution, the courts might hold that legislation permitting an item veto on a possibly different basis (e.g. majority vote) was of dubi-ous constitutionality. That, in turn, would make the courts vulnerable to the charge of meddling into "ques-tions of a political nature."

These arguments are nicely bal-anced. Perhaps the only solution to this vexatious problem is one rooted in those ideals of virtue ever-present in the minds of the Founding Fathers: Abolish the residential requirement for congressmen, thus freeing them from a special responsibility to a particular constituency and permit-ting any high-minded constituency to elect high-minded congressmen. And at the same time elect presidents who, like John Quincy Adams, refuse to use their power for patronage or for mere partisan purposes.

resident to usurp an announcy specifically assigned to the Congress.

Third, it would give the president a powerful weapon to punish or reward individual congressmen. He could

Why Japan Must Spend Much More

By Flora Lewis

BERLIN — Attempts to stem the mounting pressure for trade protectionism are breaking down. President Reagan's recent complaints against the European Community. Japan, South Korea and Brazil were pinpricks, intended to divert Congress from launching a barrage gress from launching a ballage against imports. They are not likely to defuse the fury on Capitol Hill, but they probably will increase foreign demands for retaliation.

The danger to world trade is growing too serious to deal with in this piecemeal way, especially when so many countries are unable to service their enormous debts with export earnings. There needs to be a much broader, intensive international effort to reverse the imbalance in trade and prevent contraction. The biggest burden necessarily falls on Japan; it is building surpluses like a sorrerer's apprentice who found how to start a apprentice who found how to start a magic formula but cannot turn it off. It is not enough for Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone to suggest that his compatriots buy a little more from abroad. He must explain to Japanese consumers that they are really paying for their exports, in effect sub-sidizing consumers in other countries for no return even as they contribute to unemployment abroad.

Japan is a case where the prevailing ideology about cutting government spending is contradicted. It needs to spend much more on housing, public services and infrastructure, and in ways that will generate demand for imports to bring a better balance.

U.S. pressure on Japan has tended to urge a big increase in military spending so as to some of the resources flooding markets elsewhere. This is unwise and could destabilize Asia. A much better approach would be for the industrial countries to remind Japan of how the Marshall Plan helped turn around a devastated world economy and send trade soaring to everyone's benefit.

In those postwar days the United States had all the goods to sell, but nobody had dollars to buy. If a rea-sonable part of Japan's surplus were devoted to foreign aid to struggling developing countries, it would ex-pand markets for all with a better chance for equilibrium.

West Germany too needs to in-crease spending. The fight against inflation has been largely successful, but there comes a point where the cure provokes new distortions. It took too long for the major economic powers to react to inflation and to force it down. Now, selectively, those whose excess trade is working to depress other economies have a responsibility to generate consumption. There have been dramatic changes in the economic scene since a decade ago. Zooming oil prices provoked major distortions and changed the patterns of world commerce. But now, oil exporters have overcommitted their reduced earnings. There has been a new shift in the economic scales that requires new adjustments in the flow of goods and money. These are major issues that should have been addressed at the economic summit meeting in May. The opportumiy was indered away. There wi be another chance at the World Bank-International Monetary Fund meeting next month in Scoul

The basic trouble is that national economic decisions remain uncoordinated in an intertwined world where their impact is inevitably international. The international tools for shoring up world economic health are far short of the needs.

Mr. Reagan has been consistent with his principles in resisting Ameri-can protectionism as far as he can. But the fact that he felt obliged to make concessions and is still being pushed hard is proof that reliance on market forces is not enough to prevent intolerable disruptions.

In global economics, it takes gov-erament intervention to protect free markets and free trade. Few govern-ments are prepared to sacrifice advantages even though it is in their long-term interest. But the international community can provide the context in which a Japanese prime minister, for example, would find it possible and advisable to explain to his people why Japan should invest more at home and expand foreign aid for their own future benefit.

There is no country but the United States that can lead the way to new agreements. It is a far better way than allowing trade to shrink, launching retaliations, and then desperately seeking a way out of the crisis. The New York Times

Despite Gains Toward Democracy, Turkey Still Heavily Restricts Rights

By Henry Kamm

New York Times Service ISTANBUL — Five years after a military coup, the Turkish government has reinstated important aspects of parliamentary democracy, but serious restrictions on civil rights still make the country lag behind its Western allies.

Opposition politicians openly express vigorous opposition toward the policies of Prime Minister-Purgut Ozal: Mr. Ozal was elected two years ago even though President Kenan Evren, the general who led the coup on Sept. 12, 1980, favored another candidate.

Two former prime ministers -Sulcyman Demirel on the centerright and Bulent Ecevit on the center-left. Turkey's most respected political leaders -- are active be-hind the scenes even though they are barred from political roles.

The press, according to editors of the most outspoken publications, feels increasingly free to express criticism. Many Turks say they have begun to take pleasure again in the spiritedness of their newspa-pers after years of uniform, uncriti-

Martial law, which was in effect throughout Turkey when Mr. Ozal took office, has progressively been removed. Now, it is in force in 17 of the nation's 67 provinces, including Istanbul, Turkey's largest city, and eastern provinces in which Kurdish nationalists are in armed rebellion.

Nevertheless, the national press remains formally under martiallaw censorship, a power that edi-tors say is exercised largely to control coverage of the Kurdish insurgency.

The bans on Mr. Demirel and Mr. Ecevit prevent them from using their full political weight, which is considerable. ## France Plans To Maintain Its Spending For Defense

By Joseph Fitchett

PARIS - France's military pending next year will maintain all the main military programs an-nounced by the Socialist government after it came to power in 1981, according to French sources.

The draft budget, which is to be released next week, will substantially contradict speculation that France's ruling Socialists would use the 1986 budget, which is a mid-term review of a five-year plan, to cut military spending before parliamentary elections next March.

Most other government minis-tries budgets are being cut in 1986, in line with the government's pur-suit of austerity policies.

But the military budget, certain to be passed almost intact by the Socialist-controlled parliament, continues to modernize France's strategic nuclear deterrent and to strengthen its ability to fight limit-ed wars far from its shores.

Government figures, the sources said, call for a military budget of 158.3 billion francs (currently $17.6 billion) in 1986, four billion francs less than mandated by the five-year

The 1986 defense spending would give France zero to 2-percent growth, adjusted for inflation, a percentage change comparable to the current spending of the United States and West European mem-bers of the North Atlantic Treaty

In the coming budget, new weapons programs remain intact: a supersonic air-to-ground nuclear missile to extend the life of France's airborne nuclear strike force, the first of a new generation of strategic nuclear submarines, a new nuclear-powered aircraft carrier and the first spy satellite to belong to a West European government.

France is also proceeding to build, with the West Germans, a helicopter that is to equip the Rapid Action Force set up by the French Army in 1983 to intervene stimulate the economy through lib- overseas or in West Germany in the event of war.

Under the 1986 budget, France's standing army would drop below 300,000 soldiers. Also, the planned purchase of U.S.-made AWAC early-warning airplanes has been postponed, at least until the next year, a former Defense Ministry aide said. Another new missile, a mobile nuclear medium-range weapon known as SX, has been shelved, at least for the time being.

"The heavy costs of starting to actually build Rafale will only be incurred in the late 1980s," source explained. In the 1986 budget, the air force is to get its planned 36 Mirage-2000s, two more than the number of fighters being retired.

ONDON - The Burlington L'House Fair was opened Wednesday at Burlington House, on the premises of the Royal Academy, by Prince Charles and Diana, Princess of Wales. It is an interesting, if ambiguous, event.

The ambiguity lies in its attempted suggestion of splendor and pomp, which falls flat. The dealers who put the show together appear to have stopped halfway through. The decoration is low-key, to put it

More regrettably, those important dealers that choose to participate refrain from sending in the finest of the finest. There are very few outstanding paintings at Bur-lington House. Richard Green displays a winter scene by Hendrick Avercamp, priced at £850,000. "There isn't another one on the market," he said. The words are transcribed on the label supposed to be read on the invisible side of the trunk. This is a rare case of a signature by the artist, who painted a scene as a model to be transferred in marquetry by the cabinetmaker. In addition, Steinitz has one or two extraordinary pieces of Louis XIV decorative art. His ormolu chandelier, made about 1680, is a masterpiece of French carving.

Jacques Perrin, who like his two colleagues belongs to the loosely knit professional group "Anti-quaires à Paris," exhibits one of the finest ebony desks of the Louis XVI period seen in the market in recent years. It appeared at a Drouot anction in 1983.

West Germany also contributed an important French piece of furniture. Konrad Bernheimer of Lenbachplatz in Munich is showing an elegant Transition period commode made about 1770-75 by Roger van der Cruse, known as Lacroix, who used the now-lamous mark RVLC.

Foreigners have left their mark in other fields too. Concerning Old Masters, an interesting effort has been made by a modest Paris dealer, Jean-Max Tassel. A fascinating picture by Jean Lemaire, known as Lemaire Poussin, shows two women in a park with Roman ruins at left and in the background. Tassel had a Belgian professor from Liege, A. > The foreign presence is likely to make itself increasingly felt in the next international fairs in London. Whether French or German, the foreign dealers were thrilled to display their wares in the capital of the European trade in art and antiques. Indeed, its significance extends far beyond the fair. Three of the major participants are opening new branches in London. Didier Aaron at 21 Ryder Street, a stone's throw from Christie's, is making a big splash with his gallery extending over three floors. The gallery is run by Jane Roberts, who has been handling Aaron's operations in London for three years, after working in Sotheby's Impressionist department gallery, which he has given a French name: "Aux Menus Plaisirs," at 23 Grafton Street. And Bernheimer of Munich is due to open Bernheimer Fine Arts at 32 St. Georges Street, a few steps away from the Royal Academy, in November. The gallery will be run by Heike O'Hanlon, formerly of Christie's press office.

The auction art market has long been an international one. The process is now gathering momentum in the dealer's world.

PARIS — In years to come, when people no longer have the reasons we seem to have for tolerating the aggressive boredom of much of today's expensively fashionable art, Raymond Mason's work will appear as a delightful, lively, humorous, humane and touching monument to our age.

Mason, born in Birmingham, England, in 1922, traveled to Paris on a visit 40 years ago and has been here ever since. He is famous for his large theatrical sculptures filled with figures in brightly painted ep-oxy resin. He has also produced numerous smaller pieces, drawings and bas reliefs of city scenes and landscapes. The show at the Pompidou Center includes close to 100 items, six of them big pieces.

When Mason came to Paris he was a staunch admirer of Brancusi, but he soon became a friend and admirer of Giacometti and, like him, felt the urge to represent the human figure. The popular aspect that developed in his work has led over-solemn critics to conclude that this is not serious art. "Some English critic said my

His choice of subjects for the big works are good indications of this: He did a piece showing mining families waiting at the mine head of Lievin in northern France after a disaster had cost the lives of 45 mea. "A Tragedy in the North, Winter, Rain, Tears," is the full title. People stand around, grim, shocked, red-eyed. The pathos is brilliamly ex-pressed through attitudes, as well-as in Mason's dramatic flair for placing people in a rhetorically effective way, and it comes across

What Is This Thing Called Countertrade?

Why use countertrade when straightforward buying and selling can do the trick more quickly and efficiently? Over 2000 years ago the Romans introduced gold and silver coins for use in foreign trade. The system developed over the contines, giving use to great banking dynastics and profitable merchant capitalism. However, by the early 1970s, an increasing balance-of-payments disequilibrium arose between the Western industrialized nations on the one hand and the Eastern and Third World countries on the other. In each case (Fast and South), indebtedness began to reach unmanageable proportions. In order for the West to be able to keep selling its exports to the Cometon (Council for Murual Economic Assistance) counmes, and developing countries to ger access to essential technology, there was a return to the age-old system of batter and its latter-day offshoot, countertrade.

A Viable Alternative

Seen from the Western point of view, counterrade must be regarded as less desirable than straightforward exporting using the well-tried instruments of international trade such as letters of credit, sight bills, collarerals, etc. All the same, countextrade has emerged as a viable. alternative since it enables the Western exponer to gain access to markets he could not otherwise penerate while at the same time obviating many of the dangers inherent in dealing with a country that has no foreign currency avail-

However, as people in the highly specialized field will gladly ad-mit, countentade is a delicate an traught with difficulties and verging at all times on confusion. The world is simply not teening with profitable countertrade deals just waiting to be anapped up.

Generally speaking, the larger Western exponers—be they multinationals or major nationalized industries-will have their own mading organizations dealing exclusively with marketing abroad under untavorable conditions.

There are many specialist firms in the field, however, who for a fee will accept full responsibility for these transactions and will recommend the most promising procedure. Many major banks operate mading houses that claim to be able to set up deals to benefit all

Glossary of Terms

The terminology associated with counterrade is so complex that a brief summary of the principal expressions may not be amiss. Barter, of course, refers to the eadiest form of exchange. Instead of receiving payment, the exporter will receive goods from his import partner. By selling the offered goods the exponer will receive the funds to cover the value of his exports. Payment is made exclusively by the countersupply of the agreed products. Thus barter transaction runs the risk of non-delivery of goods. This risk can best be avoided if the batter goods are delivered to the exporter first.

Counterpurchase was probably the most frequently used method of counterrade during the early 1980s, particularly in deals with the Cornecon countries, although it has now been extended to trade with the developing world. In counterpurchase the exporter receives payment for goods supplied so his import partner. However, the exporter commits himself in a parallel contract to purchase goods for a censin percentage value of his export contract from the importer's country. He can fulfill this commirment himself or, if he has approved a "chird-party clause" in his contract, he can transfer this commitment to another partner. Delivery and counterdelivery in most cases take place within five years of each other.

Compensation refers to a counterpurchase arrangement in which delivery and counterdelivery are covered by, one contract and the goods are given monetary value. The deliveries do not have to take place simultaneously. The time limit for completion of the counrecommitment is usually about counserpurchase, whereby the exporter declares his willingness to pass on the manufacture of certain products, either wholly or partially, to an appropriate foreign company.

from the exporter. Buy-back is an increasingly popular system. In this form of countertrade the importer pays the exporter for the supplied plant (or know-how) with products that

The foreign trade company can, in will be produced by the plant when it is completed (or using the know-how provided). The great advantage to the exporter in this instance is the chance to benefit from cheap labor and low-cost raw materials and to get a foothold in a potential long-term market.

Evidence and Escrow Accounts are means of organizing a counterputchase in such a way that the exponer can meet counterpurchase requirements by reimbursing himself our of funds generated through his own purchase in the importer's country.

All the terms listed so far are markers. Cleaning payments can be relatively straightforward. ## A New Name in World Trading Merx weger, chairman of Chemie Linz AG, Ausma's largest producer of fertilizers and pharmaceuticals, referred to a profit of 43 million schillings deriving from the fullyowned subsidiary Marx. This was 0.24 percent of the registered turn-over (17.64 billion schillings) of the infant enterprise which, since its birth in 1983, has made a significant impact on international trade.

Much of the credit for this modest but significant figure must go to Kirchweger himself, who was brought in to get the chemical business out of the red. In 1984 he was able to tell the owners, the Republic of Austria, that he had done so. It was at his instigation that Mera Handelsgesellschaft (Trading Company) was formally founded, inspired no doubt by the favorable showing made by the other Linz industrial giant, Voest-Alpine, with its Internating organization.

Until the advent of Merx, each of the four divisions at Chemie Linz maintained its own distribution and trading structure, both for historical reasons and because of conflicting interests. With a good sense of priorities, Kirchweger appointed the Chemic Linz purchasing manager, Helmut Scheichl, 2s director of the new supermading

The Oil Connection

With annual purchases of raw materials running from 5 billion to 6 billion schillings, Scheichl already had a clear idea of the needs of Chemie Linz. Existing counter-made and compensation deals could be streamlined and turned to better purpose in several ways. First and foremost, Chemie Linz could benefit by gening—cautiously—into the crude oil business. For these days chemicals are inexorably bound up with petroleum products. Analysis showed that 90 per cent of the raw material requirements of Chemic Linz depended on crude oil. At the same time it could not be overlooked that many oil-producing countries were setting up their own refineries near the wellheads and providing favorable conditions for on-the-spot purchase of their products. By utilizing these sources for ethykne, propylene, benzol or phenot and, if necessary, mading them locally for other essentials, great savings could be effected. The more from one year to the next. It same logic applied to the purchase only has to show a profit.

Thanks to the prevailing atmo-sphere in world oil markers, the theory quickly proved workable and has paid off in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. Satisfactory rather than sportacular, because, as Kirchweger insists, it is not his intention to press for large turnover. It does not matter if Merx.

These are nor always in conventional centers of trade. In West Africa, for instance, Menx picked Lomé, in Togo, for a representative office because it predicted major developments in the pocash business there. # Some firms bring expertise to countertrade, some bring financing. Bankers Trust brings both.

Structuring a countertrade transaction is one of the most difficult tasks faced by exporters.

Even more difficult if the firm that helps you put the deal together can not provide the financing for it.

That's a major advantage of dealing with BT International Trading Corporation. We provide both expertise and money. Which can greatly simplify and speed-even a complicated transaction.

Such single-source assistance in countertrade reflects Bankers Trust's merchant banking philosophy: a philosophy that says a bank should do far more than lend money.

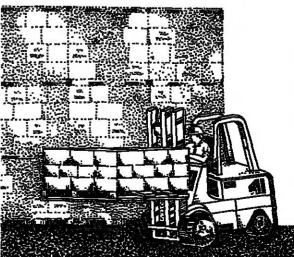

BT International Corporation embodies the Bank's long, strong tradition of trade finance. Recently, we have assisted exporters in a wide array of complicated countertrade transactions. For example: we assumed a two-year counterpurchase obligation for an exporter, provided pre-shipment finance to bridge a payment gap between import and export, and structured the pricing and payment mechanism for countertrade involving oil.

Behind each transaction was our unique combination of knowhow and in-house financing.

You can put that combination to work for you, by using our worldwide network of offices that often makes the "impossible" possible.

For help in your next countertrade transaction, call on BT International Trading Corporation. In New York, talk to Jeffrey J. Glibert at (212) 850-1758. In London, D. Paul Fletcher at 01-726-4141. In Hong Kong, Tim R. Antilla at 5-281211.

AWT has a long fund of experience which enables it to be an efficient partner in all types of transactions. It can negociate barrer, counterpurchase, buy-back and cooperation contracts and, where requested, take over such obligations in its own name. The Austrian company differs from its counterparts in the United States in drar it actually does the business instead of acting only as a matchmaker. As Waldstein explains, the limited banking license enjoyed by AWT gives it the edge when the dassied methods of financing an export to a single country are not feasible AWT can step in to provide a complete package of inhouse measures. Its own trade program mainly covers timber and related products, chemicals, foodstuffs, metals and textiles. And in these fields the offer includes not only financing but also market research, marketing and distribution—all tailored to meet individual needs. Developing countries with heavy loan commitments are particularly anxious to acquire a marketing network (which they usually cannot afford) for their goods. Thus if they get an assurance of marketing, they are likely to accept the AWT customer's product.

Action vs. Reaction

The considerable risks involved include quality, performance, absorbability of the market and-last but not least-political instability. Waldstein declines to put 2 concrease figure on numover but says: "If one goes about it cautiously and realistically, it is nevertheless an 'interesting' business. We do not run after countertrade. We are all bankers at heart, and can earn more-and sleep better-by conducting business along classical banking lines. What we are doing is not so much 'acting' as 'reacting.'

With the degree of indebtedness unlikely ever to sink back to the level it had at the beginning of the 1960s, we go into the market under very difficult circumstances and do our best to help a customer in his business. This is why trading houses tied to banks have become so large recently—because traditional methods of trading have not been possible."

For a relatively small country such as Austria, whose very survival depends on exporting, it is important to find alternate ways of selling when the classical toutes are closed. The same applies to most European countries, although not so much to the United States. because of its large domestic mar-

Concern grew in both public opinion and the Nigerian press that the goods being obtained were not being bought from the cheapest source. It was daimed, in particular, that the sugar being purchased from Brazil cost more than the going price on the world marker. Other sources stressed that this was intentional, being a discreet way to provide discounts on Nigecian oil and, thereby, assure an acceptable demand level in a weak world marker. There was a rising tide of complaints too over the quality of goods supplied and the restrictions the deal imposed on the liberty of Nigerian traders.

IMF economists insist that disguising of prices and, conse-quently, in inefficient world trade. Nigeria's counterrade offensive during the first six months of the year also raised the ire of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). Middle Eastern OPBC members were concarned that Nigeria could employ barrer deals to discount oil and further sap the organization's discipline on pricing matters and production quotas. Nigeria's official quota is pegged at 1.3 million b/d.

They stressed that it significantly reduced their ability to place Nigerian crude oil on the market given the discounts that were named to be built into the countertrade arrangements. In addition, a number of NNPC oilmen pointed out that countertrade was essentially a short-term expedient, while the oil industry must plan also for medium- and long-term contigencies. ## Mr. Polo, could you give us your opinion, concerning the countertrade activities of VAIT?"

"I think I am right in saying that those who know me, would agree that my endeavours to open up new markets and extend trading links were not just a question of luck. Trading has retained much of its original nature, it still requires ideas, courage, mutual trust with one's partners and a high degree of creativity.

The latter must be combined with a touch of aggressivity in order to secure the continual evolution of new methods of solving clients' problems.

The VAIT experts possess these vital characteristics and have learned to be one step ahead.

Take their office in Beijing for example, or their global network of contacts, I could have used something similar. VAIT has made the world smaller by bringing trading partners together, why don't you give them a call and convince yourself?"

We from VAIT don't wish to add anything except a list of our countertrading highlights:

Stock Exchange lost ground for the fourth consecutive session Friday in the heaviest trading in more than a month. The market turned lower shortly after the open and by early afternoon the Dow Jones industrial average was down more than 10 points from the previous close. Nervous shortcovering and scattered bargain hunting in bluechip issues helped the market trim some losses in late trading, participants said.

The Dow finished down 4.71 to 1,307.68. For the week the Dow fell 28.01 points. Declines pounded advances more than 2 to 1 among the 2,003 issues traded. Volume totaled 111.39 million shares compared with 107.07 million Thursday. Before the market opened, the government reported that producer prices fell 0.3 percent in August, retail sales rose 1.9 percent and industrial production picked up 0.3 percent.

Some analysts cited mild disappointment that the numbers were not stronger - particularly the industrial production figure. But other observers called the series of data a "non-event" that did not alter the view that the economy's pace remains sluggish:

On the trading floor, Cessna Aircraft was the most active issue, climbing 1½ to 29½. Cessna said it has entered into a definitive agreement to be acquired by General Dynamics for $30 a Westinghouse Electric followed, easing ¼ to Phillips Petroleum was third, down 1/4 to 11%.

Banks and Businesses Deal In U.S. Up The Big Blow to Apartheid

By LEONARD SILK

Africa has proposed to restore citizenship to millions of blacks who lost it when the government set up its "homelands" policy, which was intended to make South Africa ultimately a white state. The pass laws controlling the movement of black labor appear likely to go next. If, as it now seems, apartheid is crumbling, what finally cracked it was the threat of economic collapse, brought on not by political pressures or sanctions but by the actions of bankers and business executives—and by the economic blunders of the government.

The economic crisis has been a long time in coming. The central piece of legislation to remove blacks and control the influx of blacks into urban ar-EW YORK - President Pieter W. Botha of South ployer continuously for 10 years, (c) was under 16, or (d) received special government dispensation. A person's status could not change through marriage.

Thus a rural woman who married a "10 (1a)" man could be forced to leave a city after her husband died. The police began arresting women on streets and buses in Cape Town in 1954. The removal program, as Andrew Silk noted in his study of South African migrant labor, "A Shanty Town in South Africa," was also reflected in housing policy. The government blocked plans of cities to create family housing for blacks, instead requiring one-sex hostels for workers.

URIOUSLY, the government sought to combine its rigid controls over blacks with an increasingly laissez-faire economic policy. Stephen Lewis Jr. of Williams College, a specialist on southern Africa who has been economic adviser to Botswana, says the current crisis was "the inevitable consequence of attempting to relax selected economic controls while continuing to develop the grand control scheme; apartheid."

For nearly a decade South Africa has been moving away from direct controls on private capital and toward freer markets and market-determined prices. The rand was first unpegged from the dollar and then allowed a managed float for trade and currentaccount transactions. The "financial rand" (introduced for capital-account transactions after the Sharpeville massacre in 1960, in which 69 blacks were killed, to prevent capital flight) was climinated. Private exporters were allowed to keep proceeds abroad, forward cover was provided for importers needing foreign exchange, and direct import controls were reduced.

As a result of these measures, South Africa adjusted to the declining gold price for several years by a downward float of the rand and an active monetary policy. Only recently did problems of potential capital flight begin to appear with some regularity, but, Mr. Lewis says, "When the crunch came, the deregulation of capital movements meant it came with a vengeance." Pretoria's determination to maintain white control, he adds, required huge expenditures on internal security and defense at and beyond its borders. At the same time, steeply rising costs of enforcing apartheid and supporting the "homelands" policy created fiscal problems, complicating the efforts of the Reserve

Bank to maintain balanced external payments. When these elements came together, it was just a matter of time before there was a run on the bank. After all the debate in illeges, universities and Congress over disinvestment, it was bankers who pulled the plug on South Africa. Capital began to leave the country. Output fell, and the rand fell. And South Africa began to propose serious changes in apartheid.

But, as Mr. Lewis says, "Nothing less than the fundamental reorientation of the economic system and its political superstructure will being long term according health to South Africa."

ture will bring long-term economic health to South Africa."

Domestic Figures Best in 30 Years

The Associated Press

DETROIT — Domestic auto sales in the United States for early September rose 56.9 percent com-pared with the like period in 1984, according to company figures re-leased Friday.

Americans continued to flock to dealer showrooms for cut-rate financing and rebate arrangements on selected 1985 models. However, analysts expect that the dramatic sales increases of recent weeks will level off in coming weeks as those stocks dwindle to make way for the 1986 models.

The seven major domestic automakers sold an average 33,669 cars a day in the Sept. 1-10 period, breaking a record of 23,815 in that reporting period in 1955.

Americans Are Aping the Imitators

The Japanese, Once Disdained, Are the Target

By Nicholas D, Kristof
New York Times Service
NEW YORK — After decades of pooh-poohing Japanese scientific research, American ex-ecutives no longer patronize the lapanese as "imitators" and "copiers" of American technology. Quite the contrary. In the wake of Japan's drive for technological supremacy, they are scrambling to keep up with the new scientific research in Japan. It is not an easy task. As Japan

finally moves from imitation to innovation -and becomes a formidable competitor in crucial areas such as supercomputers, bio-technology and robotics — American scientists find themselves hard-pressed to learn of Japanese breakthroughs. So in the past year or so, a small industry has been emerging, consisting of companies that help monitor Japanese technology and, in ef-fect, broker developments to American corporations, "What's at stake may well be the competitiveness of American industry," said Richard J. Samu-els, who directs a program on Japanese science at the Massachusetts institute of Technology. "If you can't pay attention to and assimilate technological information beyond your borders, you're playing the game with one arm tied behind your back."

The new technology brokers are trying to address the problem by translating and indexing Jap-anese scientific articles. For example, the Japanese Technical Information Service, a Xerox subsidiary, is starting up opera-tions near Philadelphia this fall. Nissho Iwai, the Japanese trad-

"That's been true in the past, but I detect a smugness setting in."

That smugness certainly is not justified. In robotics, an expanding area of high technology, Japan deploys more than twice as many robots as the United States. Fifty-four percent of new chemical patents worldwide now belong to the Japanese. Biotech-

WICHITA, Kansas — Cessna Aircraft Co., the nation's last independent major manufacturer of general aviation planes, announced Friday that it had agreed to an acquisition proposal by General Dynamics Corp., the huge St. Louis defence contractor. defense contractor.

Spokesmen for both companies said a merger agreement called for General Dynamics to acquire a minimum of 11.18 million shares of cessua might be viewed as dead Cessna stock at $30 a share, making the tender offer worth at least $335 million. With the 500,000 shares of Cessna stock already owned by General Dynamics, the company would control 50.1 percent of the Wichita manufacturer's stock.

Plans call for Cessua to become a wholly owned subsidiary of General Dynamics with the current Cessua officers, Russell W. Meyer, chairman, and R.W. Van Sant president, retaining their offices. In addition, Mr. Meyer will be elected executive vice president of General Dynamics and will be appointed to that company's board of directors, an announcement from Cessna said.

General Dynamics is a major defense contractor involved in developing and producing military air-craft, submarines, missile and gun systems, cruise missiles, tanks, electronics and space systems.

In 1967, the company became the world's leading aircraft manufacturer by surpassing Piper Air-eraft Corp. in the total number of planes delivered.

About 64 percent of the 213,000 active aircraft in the United States are Cessnas, according to industry estimates. The company is the leading manufacturer of business jets with a 37.3-percent market share.

Since 1980 when an economic downturn hit the aviation industry, Cessna has laid off thousands of workers and severely curtailed its operations. It had gone from delivering 9,000 units a year to about 1,000. Employment dropped from 15,200 in 1979 to a current level of about 5,500.

Cessna had been the subject of takeover rumors for more than two years. Its stock hit what at the time was a 52-week high of $28 on Tuesday and closed at $29.50 on Friday. General Dynamics closed at $77.375, down $1.875.

Some Cessna workers expressed disappointment that the company workers. "There are special aerospace manufacturing processes at Cessna that will certainly dovetail at Gen-eral Dynamics." Mr. Lewis said.

Retail Prices Rose 0.3% in U.K. in July

International Herold Tribune LONDON - British retail prices in August rose 0.3 per-cent from July as inflation continued to abate, the Depart-ment of Employment said Friday.

The retail price index was up 6.2 perrent from a year earlier. That compares with year-toyear rates of 6.9 percent in July and 7 percent in both May and Inflation had declined by the end of 1984 to 4.6 percent, far below the peak of 26.9 percent in August 1975. Early this year, however, the pound plunged against other major currencies amid fears that the government had relaxed its anti-inflation rigor in an effort to spark the economy and create jobs.

To defend the pound, the government forced interest rates up sharply in January, and the resulting rise in mortgage payments helped spur inflation in the spring. The government's by the end of the year.

Murdoch Trying To Buy Rest of Fox

The Associated Pres LOS ANGELES — Just six months after buying half of 20th Century-Fox Film Corp. for $250 million, publisher Rupert Murdoch is negotiating to purchase the rest of the movie company from Marvin Davis, the Denver oilman, sources have confirmed.

The talks are the latest in a series of efforts by Mr. Murdoch to become the sole owner of Fox. Mr. Murdoch to become the sole owner to Pour Mr. Murdoch had tried to acquire the entire company from Mr. Davis before settling for half in March. Three months later, Mr. Davis reportedly was on the brink of selling out his remaining holdings to Mr. Murdoch but changed his mind.

Sources close to both men described the cur-rent negotiations as serious but one said the chance of reaching an agreement was "about even at best."

Mr. Davis is reportedly seeking between $300 million and $350 million for his remaining Fox has had financial problems recently. For the nine months ended May 25, Fox lost $80.1 million on revenue of $468.1 million. It blamed the losses on poor showings at the box office. In fiscal 1983, the company lost $89.7 million.

However, this summer the studio had a major hit with "Cocoon," which has grossed in excess of $70 million.

In May, Mr. Davis and Fox were considering teaming up to purchase part of Metromedia Inc., but Mr. Davis pulled out of that deal. Mr. Murdoch went ahead on his own and agreed buy six Metromedia television stations for $1.55 billion. Mr. Murdoch owns newspapers and maga-zines in the United States, Britain and Austra-

Bank America To Sell Building

SAN FRANCISCO -- Bank-America Corp. said Friday that it had signed a letter of intent to sell its headquarters complex in San Francisco to Walter H. Shorenstein, a developer, for $660 million

The complex consists of a 52-story building, the bank's main office and an adjoining building. The company said it believed the price would be the highest ever in the United States for a single building complex. Under terms of the letter. BankAmerica will lease back 60 percent of the tower initially, plus all of the main office and the adjoining building.

The tower building is the largest in San Francisco, and the complex has a total of 1.8 million square feet (162,000 square meters) of rentable space. Closing is expected be-fore the end of this month.

Not all of Schlumberger's moves under Mr. Riboud have worked equally well, however. Fairchild Camera & Instrument Corp., a semiconductor maker based in Mountain View, California, for example, has lost millions of dollars since Schlumberger bought it in 1979. And in 1983, the company's overall earnings declined for the first time in 19 years. Although earnings rose slightly last year, they are still below 1982 levels and analysts expect another decline this cording to analysts. It thrived during the 1970s as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries set off a frenzied search for oil.

Mr. Riboud's success in attracting top-notch managers and in bringing together personnel "who are qualified to come up with the most sophisticated instrumentations, has made the company the leader in its field," Mr. Reilly said.

"I think he has been a great lead-er of the company," said Vishnu Swarup, an analyst with Goldman. Sachs. "Every leader has some weak points, and his weak point has been being very stubborn on Fairchild, and in perhaps hanging on to it longer than he should."

But Mr. Swarup said Mr. Riboud's strategy had always focused on long-term results. Mr. Reilly said Mr. Riboud's emphasis on

A 20-Year Era in Leadership Ends at Schlumberger heavy spending for research made the company's oil testing — or "logging" — devices the most so-phisticated in the industry, and gave it an edge over its rivals in the recent oil industry slump.

Even Mr. Riboud's competitors express admiration for his manage-

The index is made up of 10 indicators, including export value, letters of credit received, stocks in vivehouses and M-I and M-3 money supply.

The new issue was for Thomson--Brandt International BV, guaranteed by Thomson SA. It was priced at 100% and pays 10 percent over seven years. The lead manager was Banque Paribas Capital Markets. Because the put option, which is at par, can reduce the bond's life to two years, fees for it were only 1% percent compared with the more usual 1% percent for a seven-year maturity. It ended on the when-issued market at a discount of about I percent bid, although dealers said olume was not particularly large. In the secondary market, sea-soned dollar-straight issues generally closed with gains of 1/4 or 1/4 point, although selected issues rose further, dealers said. Sentiment was boosted by news that U.S. retail sales, excluding car sales, rose only 0.4 percent during August and that industrial produc-tion was up 0.3 percent in the same month. Some professionals had predicted that production would rise by more than 0.5 percent. "The figures came as a real relief to the market and although there government bond market.

On the week, dollar straights still ended with slight losses, generally around % to % point, with prices not totally recovered from the losses suffered last Friday and Monday after news that U.S. unemployment dropped to 7 percent in August from 7.3 percent in July.

Floating-rate note issues closed with gains of a few basis points on the day, dealers said. One trader said some professional operators shorted the market before release of the U.S. figures and then had to cover their positions in the afternoon. "After the data, trading was active for a while, but then died out once people had tidied up their positions, he said.

Japanese convertible bonds were generally firmer after a quiet day's trading, during which activity was generally restricted to book-squaring because of a two-day break in trading on the Tokyo stock market, dealers said.

Sterling-straight issues finished firmer with some bonds moving higher on the back of the U.K.

Reviewed by Robert Bernard Martin N THE wholesome scholarly exhumation of the

A Victorians in the past half-century, one of the most dramatic rehabilitations has been of the reputation of John Ruskin. This critic of art, architecture, and society had dwindled in public estimation into a quaint word-painter, but now we are beginning to realize that he was as original as his contemporaries believed. Unfortunately, the scholarly industry that restored his reputation has also made it painfully apparent that he was one of the oddest in a century of eccentrics and that the sad insanity of his old age was clearly foreshadowed in his early life. It is the triumph of this fine new biography to make both sides of him fascinating and believable. Tim Hilton apparently plans to publish two volumes; this one introduces Ruskin's ambitious, pi-etistic family, his financially snug suburban childhood as the only offspring of elderly parents, then his undergraduate years, during which his mother moved to Oxford each term so that he could spend every evening in filial conversation with her until the college gates were closing. This first 40 years included his writing of "Modern Painters," "Seven Lamps of Architecture," "The Stones of Venice" and his defense of the Pre-Raphaelites (of whom he actually knew little). In this first half of his life he began developing his deeply Puritanical ethic of art, according to which the work is to be judged by the attitude and morality of the artist or workman rather than by the product itself. Running parallel to this was his attempt to erase the distinction between fine and applied art. Still to come was the logical conclusion to these tenets, the belief that before art could properly exist, a fit society for it had to be brought to birth.

This volume also covers Ruskin's youthful love of Adèle Domecq and his unconsummated marriage to Effie Gray, which ended after six years with an annulment on the grounds of "incurable impotency." apparently leaving him blandly unperturbed by the anguish it had caused her. At the conclusion of the volume Ruskin is on the verge of his pathetic infatuation with Rose La Touche, the 10-year-old daughter of one of his Oxford contemporaries.

Not surprisingly, the history of his erotic life has generated more indignation than understanding. When they were traveling on the Continent he found that architecture had more charms for him than Effic did, and he confessed that he had "no heart nor eyes for anything but stone." His polite neglect of the feelings of a young and passionate woman was intolerable, but it is improbable that he ever really understood what she was going through.

Without seeming to condone Ruskin's behavior, Hilton is urbanely unshockable about it, taking the attitude that the reader can see what was mean and pitiful without the help of a wagging forefinger. Hilton brings much fresh information to this book through the patient re-examination of previously known sources and the discovery of new material. By his splendid and leisurely assembly of small details and supporting characters, he saturates the book with the flavor of Victorian life. Inevitably, the reader is reminded of the crammed furnishings of rooms in the last century, of the accumulation of detail in its paintings and poetry, and even of the combination of ideas that made up its intellectual ferment. But the sheer plenitude of Victorian collections was often in danger of becoming clutter, and Hilton doesn't always avoid this risk: He becomes so fascinated with each person Ruskin met that he feels compelled to give background on even the least important, and the narrative flow is often held up.

Nor is it always safe to rely on the details. For example, we are told that Tennyson met Ruskin in "1855, the year in which he succeeded Rogers as laureate." But Tennyson became poet laureate in 1850, and Samuel Rogers, who died in 1855, never held the post. What is important is the year of the meeting of Tennyson and Ruskin, which is probably

Dubieties like these aside - and usually they are minor - this is as good a life of Ruskin as we are apt

By Mark Asher Washington Post Service
PITTSBURGH — Former miljor league baseball player John Milner has testified in U.S. District Court that he bought two grams of cocaine in the Pittsburgh Pirates' clubhouse at Three Rivers Stadium during a game against the Houston Astros on June 13, 1980.

Milner, 35 and now unemployed, Milner, 35 and now imemployed, stalso said Thursday that years earlier he took "red juice," a liquid amphetamine, or stimulant, from the locker of Willie Mays when their dressing stalls were next to each other in the New York Mets' amphetament. clubhouse. Mays, a member of the Hall of Fame, played for the Mets in 1972 and 1973 before retiring. The use of amphetamines was a key issue in the sixth day of the cocaine-trafficking trial of Phila-delphia caterer Curtis Strong, Milner's former teammate, Dave Parker, who now plays for the Cincinnati Reds, supported earlier tesilmony by Dale Berra that the Pirates' team captain, Willie Stargell, and Bill Madlock supplied their teammates with the prescription drug around 1980.

Stargell and Madlock have denied distributing amphetamines. Milner, who was released during spring training in 1983 after an 11year major league career with three teams, said he bought the cocaine from Strong after meeting him in the clubhouse in the early innings of the 1980 game. Milner testified that he and Parker, who, Milner said, gave him cocaine on 15 to 20 occasions, "went for a ride after the game, snorted a little bit and then went our separate ways." On his second day of testimony, Parker also said he and his team-mates were warned by the Pirates' manager, Chuck Tanner, and the team captains to stay away from Strong and Shelby Greer, another alleged cocaine dealer who had access to the team chibhouse.

Contacted before Thursday night's game. Tanner said that "I really don't know that Greer guy, and I'm almost sure I didn't" warn his players. "If we felt anyone was involved, we would have corrected it. The Pittsburgh Pirates baseball club would not have stood for anything like that." Parker is "totally wrong." Tanner said. "Maybe his mind was not working right."

6-Run 7th Inning Overtakes Blue Jays

By Murray Chass

New York Times Service NEW YORK — The Toronto Blue Jays, who have held onto first who had backed off from the base place in the American League East Division since May 13, cracked for the Yankees roared through for a six-run rally and a 7-5 victory in the game series. The Blue Jays' lead over the Yankees was cut to one and a half games.

Tony Fernandez, the young handed Gary Lavelle to pitch to shortstop, opened the crack with an error in the seventh inning and Ron two left-handed hitters. Hassey hit a tie-breaking three-run home run, bringing a thunderous roar from the Yankee Stadium crowd of 52,141.

The Yankees now are 51-16 in their stadium and have won 30 of their last 36 games on all fields.

The six-run rally, overcoming a 4-1 deficit, made Ron Guidry a winner for the 19th time this season, putting him one victory away from reaching the 20-victory plateau a third time. Guidry struggled, but he lasted long enough for the Yankees to catch up to Dave Stieb, the Blue Javs' No. 1 starter, who allowed only one hit the first six innings.

Stieb got the first batter in the seventh, then walked Willie Ran-dolph. Bobby Meacham hit what should have been a force-play grounder to short, but Fernandez was indecisive in making the play. First, he started toward second as if to make the play himself, then sud-

Pete's Numbers Appeared Rosey

HARRISBURG, Pennsylvania - Pete Rose's recordbreaking performance was a hit with so many players in Pennsylvania's daily lottery Thurs-day that it forced a halt in sales of tickets bearing the numbers 4-1-9-2

Those numbers correspond to Rose's hit total after he broke Ty Cobb's mark. Sales of the numbers 1-4-9-2, 1-9-4-2 and 2-9-1-4 also were stopped, a lottery board spokeswoman said, because on each combination a potential payout limit of $5 million had been reached. None of the combinations won.

Indian Public Relations

By Allan Reditt

V AWALAPITI, Brazil — Ama-Y zonian Indians, after nearly 500 years of pillage, are learning the white man's public relations techniques in a bid to get a better deal for the surviving tribes. For the first time, the Indians invited three government ministers to attend this year's sacred Kuarap festival of mourning for the dead and, having got their attention, lobbied them intensively on the need for Indian land to be protected.

When the Portuguese arrived in Brazil in 1500, it is estimated, there were four million to six million Indians. Only 220,000 remain, still battling settlers and prospectors for their dwindling terrain.

As a Brazilian Air Force twin-engined transport plane twisted over the jungle to land at a dust strip near Yawalapiti, in a corner of the upper Xingu region, the Indians' problem became clear: Huge es-tates cleared of timber encircled the

Marcos Terena, a Terena Indian working at the Ministry of Culture, said: "We hope to encourage re-spect for the Indians through this visit to establish better relations between the Indians and the goverament

The 100-strong party of whites included Ministers of Culture Aluisio Pimenta, Interior Minister Ronaldo Costa Couto and Labor Minister Almir Pazzianotto. President José Sarney was unable to attend but sent a spokesman, Fernando Cesar Mesquita

Their host was Aritana, chief of Yawalapiti village. Guests from neighboring villages of Indians speaking the Aruak Karibe and Tupi languages Indians attended.

Resting with families and pets in hammocks slung in clearings, near fires kindled to offset the night cold, the men painted themselves and any white who cared to join them in preparation for the nightlong ceremony.

They scored their skin with stiff wooden combs and daubed themselves with orange pigment from waxy urucu seeds, with charcoal or with the sap of the genipup tree, to make bold patterns. In some cases their short-cut hair was solid with red pigment.

Welcoming parties set fire to the undergrowth to guide neighbors who came by truck, on foot, in congruously, carried huge radio and tape recorder sets.

"We dedicate this Kuarup to all the tribal people of Brazil especially the forgotten tribes of the Amazon, the oppressed Pataxo, Guarani. Kaingang . . . " intonea Yanocula Rodarte. a deputy director of the Xingu Indian reservation. In the center of the village stood six carved tree trunks denoting people in line to the chieftaincy who died in the last year, including the 2-month-old daughter of Ari-tana. After a night of lament, the logs were thrown into the river to liberate the spirits.

Despite the colorful ceremonies, the Indians did not forget their reason for permitting the white intru-sion, Chief Raoni of the Txucarramae tribe told Costa Couto: "Sarney pays attention to you, I have to pay attention to my peo-ple." He delivered a stream of complaints about killings of his people.

"I don't have the means to wage war." Raoni said. The former military government of Brazil appropriated a 15-kilometer (9-mile) strip of his land. Costa Couto assured him that compensation was being arranged.

As dawn broke after a night of vailing and lobbying and exploding fireworks, the mood changed. It was time for the huka huka wrestling contest and the emergence of the virgins, white-skinned from living in seclusion for as much as three years.

Throwing up clouds of dust, the wrestlers whirled around. Aritana emerged as champion. It was difficult for white visitors to assess whether the fight had been straight or a political compromise.

The ministers flew back to the concrete jungle of Brasilia promising their hosts that the demarcation of Indian lands would be included in a new constitution to be written next year.

There are powerful lobbies ranged against the Indian claim, however; mining companies and ranchers say that, given Brazil's more than $100 billion in foreign debts, allowing 220,000 of the country's 144 million people to maintain 7 percent of the territory in an unproductive state would be economic suicide.

Full Life, Empty Hall for Renee Katz

By Linda Wolfe

New York Times Service

EW YORK — In the summer of 1979, her name was in newspapers around the world, a testament to the single moment on a subway platform that could irrevocably change a person's life. That sense of vulnerability produced a flood of public concern for Renee Katz. a music student whose right hand was severed when she was pushed in front of a subway train. Could the hand be reattached? Would she play the piano or flute again? What would she make of her life?

Follow me, said Katz the other day, the tails of her lab coat flapping as she darred down the corridor of North Shore University Hospital on Long Island. At 24, she is working as an occupa-tional therapist, helping others along the road to rehabilitation she trod for more than two years.

She entered an empty lecture hall and headed to the back of a stage. Buried in a jungle of cable wires, slide projectors and video screens was a piano she had scoured hospital grounds to find. As she often does at lunchtime.

then the auditorium is empty. Katz sat by the piano and began to play. But the fingers that once whisked over the keys now plod; playing the flute, which Katz had en studying at the city's High School of Music and Arts, is vir-tually impossible. "It's really so sad," she said.

All traces of remorse end with this matter-of-fact admission. The hand, so mangled that doctors considered not trying to save it, was reattached during 16 hours of microsurgery and is now strong enough to arm-wrestle. The teen-age sweetheart who stood by Katz's side during her ordeal. David Simon, is now her husband. The aborted plan to pursue a music fellowship at the New England Conservatory of Music led to a degree in occupational therapy from New York University and a creative and challenging career.

Katz is not just muddling through her new life, but rejoicing in it. She does not just walk, she bolts; she does not just talk, she spills out ideas in a fast-flowing river of words. "I'm lucky," she said, "really lucky." She was eating yogurt with her left hand, a small tribute

"It's a question of concentrat-ing not on what you've lost but on what you've been lucky enough to " said Dr. William Shaw, an associate professor at New York University Medical Center and head of plastic surgery at Belle-vue Medical Center who led the surgical team that reattached

Kaiz's hand. Over two years, for more than an hour a day, five days a week, Kaiz attended physical and occupational therapy sessions at the Institute of Rehabilitation Medicine of New York University Hospital. She can remember bursting into tears a number of times as she lifted weights and did stretching exercises, working to regain the use of her hand.

"It was traumatic and very frustrating for her," said Patricia Caster, the occupational therapist who worked with Katz at the institute. "For the first month she couldn't move her fingers. Then she could move them but couldn't grasp anything. It took about five more months to be able to feed herself, and even then it was with special adaptive equipment."

Katz ended formal treatment toward the end of 1981, although the therapy she now administers to others is in itself rehabilitative. Coaching people whose upper that you understand what they are going through," Katz said in the white-walled room where she and 15 other therapists at North Shore treat outpatients and those who are hospitalized. "Everybody's experience is really different, and some people would resent hearing that.

Not all of Katz's 12 patients know about her accident, despite the bandage she wears for protection when she works. She tells the story only to those who she thinks might draw something from it, she said, and not those whose trauma has made them too selfinvolved to learn from others.

Ann Carbonaro, one of Katz's hospitalized patients, suffers from a rare spinal disorder that has left her on her back with little things patients can see from me is that pain ends." Katz said. "It might take a really long time and feel like it's never going to happen, but they can look at me and see that it does." Linda Caplan, 28, who lost the use of her arms after a stroke three years ago, sees Katz as a reminder that she, too, may regain ber abilities.

"I can't pick up a dime now," Caplan said. "It makes me crazy. But I watch Rence do it and I know that she was even worse off than I am. If she can do it, I should be able to do it better.

And for Katz, there is still her music. A soprano, she now sings semiprofessionally.

Sometimes she will emerge from the back of the stage in the hospital's lecture hall and belt out a ballad to the empty seats, or practice scales to warm up for her weekly singing lessons. She per-forms with a Long Island band that plays at weddings and is pol-ishing up an act that she hopes to take to a Manhattan nightclub.

"Sure it would be nice to play the piano while I sang," Katz said. "So you get an accompanist instead. A lot of people do. Maybe it's even better that way, because then you can focus all your bodies have been debilitated by muscle control. She knows all energy on getting better at one injury or illness, Katz's right about Katz. "It makes me feel specific thing."
